

THE YEAR IS 2040.

Gitcoin Grants has been funding public goods for over twenty years. Free and open source values have long since broken out of the web and into the mainstream. Protocols of abundance now run amok, enriching every aspect of life in many parts of the world.

DAOs thrive in federated international assemblages, composing and decomposing to face the issue at hand, syncopated by alternating beats of solidarity and independence, the rhythms needed to nurse strategic diversity. The times demand it, for Moloch, sensing imminent defeat, has redoubled its efforts. In the negative space of the public goods ecosphere is a brazen culture of corruption and extraction not seen for decades, zombie institutions and hollow states forging a last stand.

Community Rounds number in the hundreds, and projects in the tens of thousands. The theme is Moloch: The Final Battle.
